INUIT HERITAGE TRUST
Curator of Community Engagement

The Curator of Community Engagement is responsible for developing collections, exhibitions, interpretation, and education initiatives in collaboration with heritage institutions throughout Nunavut, in Canada and internationally where appropriate.

The position requires an undergraduate degree in anthropology, archaeology, history, native studies, or a related field plus a graduate degree or diploma in museum studies, heritage management, conservation, cultural resource management or a related field or a combination of education and experience. The applicant should have a minimum of three to five years’ experience in the heritage field with extensive knowledge of museum and archival standards.

A high degree of cross-cultural sensitivity is essential.

Travel to and work in remote communities as well as southern partner institutions can take up to 25% of the work time.

The position requires familiarity with indigenous issues and current approaches to decolonize museums.

Over time, the curator is expected to increasingly become familiar with the Nunavut collection and take the lead role in designing the permanent exhibits at the Nunavut Heritage Centre.

The Curator of Community Engagement will be self-motivated, able to work independently and in a team with limited supervision with a strong interest in educational outreach, Inuit collections and ethnography.

Fluency in Inuktut will be an asset.

Inuit Heritage Trust offers a competitive salary and benefits package including housing and northern allowance, group medical and dental insurance, vacation travel assistance, and a pension plan.

The benefits package also provides support for life-long professional development.

The position is located in Iqaluit. Relocation assistance is available.

Closing date for receipt of applications is Friday, April 02, 2021.
